

Recessionary Discrimination At Citigroup

October 5, 2010 • Results

Wigdor LLP represented one current and five former female employees who alleged that Citigroup has a pattern and practice of discriminating on the basis of gender and/or pregnancy in terms of pay, promotion and layoffs. Douglas H. Wigdor, who also was lead counsel in connection with a group of individual women in an alleged gender discrimination class action complaint against Dresdner Kleinwort, represented the women in this matter and coined the phrase "Recessionary Discrimination," to describe a growing trend by companies of using mass lay-offs to cover-up the discriminatory treatment and/or impact on groups of women, people of color and those over 40. The former Citigroup employees featured in a Forbes magazine cover story investigating the impact that the economic downturn has had on women in the financial services industry.
